U.S. Confirms Reports Of Serb Torture Centers

Washington Says That It's Concerned But Won't Call for Council Session

Compiled by Our Staff From Dispatches
WASHINGTON — The United States said Monday that it had confirmed reports that Serbian forces bad set up detention centers in what was once Yugoslavia in which Bosnian and Croatian civilians bave been tortured and murdered.

"We do know from our own reports, information similar to the press reports, that Serbian forces are maintaining what they call detention centers for Croatians and Moslems," said Richard A. Boucher, a State Department spokesman.

He said that "there have been abuses, torturing and killings taking place" in those centers.

According to two freed prisoners interviewed by the New York daily Newsday, the Serbs have established two detention camps in northern Bosnia where thousands of civilians have been slaughtered, starved or imprisoned.

Mr. Boucher said Washington also had reports of Bosnians and Croatians also maintaining detention centers, but we do not have similar allegations of mistreat-

"You have to be a diplomat at certain times, and at certain times you have not to be a diplomat," said Butros Butros Ghali, the former Egyptian Foreign Ministry official who took over as secretary- general from Javier Pérez de Cuéllar in January.

"Certain facts have to be said," he insisted. The dispute, which had been building all year, broke into the open in mid-July. Millions Join In National Strike in South Africa

Some Violence Erupts As 2-Day Action Starts But No Wide Bloodshed

By Bill Keller

New York Times Service
JOHANNESBURG — In what organizers hailed as a resounding and comparatively peaceful black "referendum" in support of end-ing white rule, millions of South Africans began a two-duy general strike on Monday that stilled large portions of industry and turned urbancenters into ghost towns.

The day was marred by sporadic violence that killed at least 12 people, a fairly typical death toll in South Africa these days. There were numerous reports of intimidation, and interviews in black townships around Johannesburg indicated that many blacks complied with the shutdown for fear of reprisals if they broke ranks.

But government warnings of widespread bloodshed were not realized. The African National Congress and its trade union allies issued strong advance appeals against intimidation. and there was extensive monitoring, including a team of 10 observers from the United Nations.

Two journalist covering the strike, Paul Taylor of The Washington Post and Phillip van Niekerk of the Weekly Mail, a Johannesburg newspaper, were wounded when their car was hijacked along a notoriously perilous highway near Sebokeng township, south of Johannes-burg, A bullet struck Mr. Taylor's rib, and Mr. van Niekerk, who also writes for the Post, was shot through the jaw.

The strike, which sponsors originally portrayed as a longer protest aimed at stunning the government into surrendering power, had been scaled back until it became more of a cathartic ritual aimed at letting off steam in the townships before a resumption of talks on the country's political future.

The government is already reported to have agreed on new concessions to restart the negotiations that broke off in June. The concessions are said to include an offer to hand over power to an interim coalition government by the year's end and the release of several hundred political prisoners. The burden of the work stoppage fell over-whelmingly on South African blacks, who lost pay and risked their jobs if they stayed home, and endangered their safety if they did not.

in black townships closed carly. M black entrepreneurs gave up two days of busi-ness rather than risk the wrath of township militants. "I don't know what is the purpose of the strike," said Lucas Abanyane, the 60-year-old proprietor of a Soweto fish-and-chips shop. But he said he was closing out of fear that local youths would ransack his store, as they did during an earlier strike.

Although white-owned industries suffered fi-nancial losses, most whites were barely inconvenienced. Merchants in white neighborhoods opened for business as usual, white schools ignored the boycott and white suburbs were served as usual by black domestic servants and black security guards.

Wire services reported from Johannesburg: Despite the initial success of the two-day strike called by the African National Congress. the work stoppage had no realistic chance of bringing down the leadership, which has waited

OLYMPIC OP PODIUM

A Winner Disqualified

Khalid Skah of Morocco was disqualified for getting assistance from a team-mate after finishing first in the men's 10,000-meter run, handing the gold medal to Richard Chelimo of Kenva. Skah finished in 27:46.70, sprinting past Chelimo in a dramatic final 100 meters. But half an hour later, his victory was wiped out because a teammate, Hammou Boutayeb, had run in front of Chelimo and Skah for most of the final three laps and weaved to hinder Chelimo. The crowd whistled with derision and an official tried unsuccessfully to pull Boutayeb, who was a lap behind the leaders, off the track. Addis Abebe of Ethiopia was moved up to second, and Salvatore Antibo of Italy was awarded the brouze.

A Canadian Victory

Mark McKoy of Canada won the 110meter hurdles, taking command with two burdles to go and winning comfortably in 13.12 seconds. Two Americans, Tony Dees and Jack Pierce, were second and third.

Ouincy Watts of the United States set an Olympic record of 43.71 seconds in the men's 400 semifinals, and a teammate, Mike Conley, broke the Olympic triple jump mark with a leap of 57 feet 1014 inches. He later would have set a world record with a longer jump, but it was wind-aided.

'To Show the World'

Only days ago Mehmed Skender of Bosnia-Herzegovina was fighting in the trenches against the Yugoslav Army. On Monday, undernourished and undertrained, his team's only weightlifter, he was competing in the Olympics.

"We must be bere to show the world that we are alive, that we exist," said Mladan Talic, one of the team's organizers. "We cannot let the world forget what is happening to us."

An unknown from North Korea, Gwang Li, jumping for joy after defeating Serafim Todorov of Bulgaria, the world bantamweight champion. Todorov visibly disagreed with the decision. North Korea's last boxing gold, also won by a bantamweight, was in 1976.

Money Over Medals

Deprived of state privileges, bereft of hometown fans and anxious about their future, the Olympic athletes of the former Soviet Union are turning in impressive performances motivated largely by one desire: to secure commercial sponsors in the West.

The pursuit of money instead of the Order of Lenin is proving to be a seductive inducement for Olympic success. In gymnasties, weightlifting, swimming, wrestling and track and field, the Soviet-trained athletes have managed to sustain their previous successes in Olympic events in spite of political and economic turmoil at

As the competition continues into its second week, the Soviet-trained athletes, performing together for the last time as the Unified Team before they adopt the colors of their now-independent republics, had surprised even themselves so far by winning 75 medals as of Monday morning, including 32 golds. The United States ranked well back in second place with 57 medals and 19 golds, while Germany was next with a total of 46, including 14 golds.

At a Sunny Chinese Resort, the Nation's Course Is Decided

By Sheryl WuDunn New York Times Service

BEIDAIHE, China - A Chinese worker circled a small pavilion tucked among the sleepy hills here, and when the guard was not looking, he stole a peek at the red-tile roof of a mansion that for the next month may be the most important building in China.

Under the roof of the mansion, which is surrounded by trees, Deng Xiaoping, China's senior leader, is taking counsel on whom to promote and dismiss, and on how to redefice the Communist road

Each summer, when the political heat follows the mercury upward, China's leaders retire to this seaside resort to debate the nation's future alongside the sand and salty water of the Bohai Gulf. Although their movements are never announced, Chinese say that Mr. Deng arrived in mid-July and that most of his associates have joined him to occupy the adjacent mansions on the hillside.

"That's where it's all happening," a foreign diplomat said, referring to Beidaihe.

In a nation where the most important decisions are made not by a parliament or even a polithuro but by consensus among a handful of old men, Beidaihe is usually where the bargaining takes place and an agreement is thrashed out.

This year, the Beidaihe meeting will be even more

The party elders will have to determine the new roster of leaders and set the agenda for the 14th Communist Party Congress, which meets this fall to select a new Central Committee. A party congress takes place only once in about every five years; it sets the nation's direction and pace.

Many Chinese intellectuals expect the congress to legitimize a bold program for liberalization. Even Chen Yun, the elderly hard-liner who is Mr. Deng's most powerful rival, recently endorsed special economic zones and other new methods for economic

"We expect a lot of changes at the 14th Party Congress," a university lecturer said. "Next year will be much more open than this year."

Another argency probably nags at Mr. Deng these days: his mortality. Three of his close revolutionary colleagues have died this year, so Mr. Deng, who is 87, must be anxious to complete the task of deciding on

"Deng is in a tough spot," a Chinese journalist said.
"It all requires a delicate balance, in accommodate all the different groups and factions. And all this is being sorted out at Beidaihe."

Those holding formal positions often commute to Beijing for meetings, but most of the octogenarians remain in Beidaihe in the July and August heat. Since they have arrived, Beidaihe has gushed with gossip about who has come and who has not come, who will step aside and who will step ahead

The fate of Prime Minister Li Peng may well be determined in Beidaihe this summer. Mr. Li's five-year term expires early next year; and there are whispers that Mr. Deng would like to move him aside into a less powerful post, like the largely ceremonial position of the presidency. Mr. Chen and other hard-liners are unlikely to agree to that without a tussle.

Mr. Chen, who apparently rarely comes to Beidaihe, may retire at the party congress from his job as chairman of the Central Advisory Commission, which Mr. Deng has been trying to dissolve for years.

The Deng arrival in mid-July was followed a few days later by those of Yang Shangkun, China's president, and then Mr. Li Bo Yibo, another elderly leader, and Wan Li, Mr. Deng's bridge partner and chairman of China's legis-lature, are also believed in be here.

Tight restrictions are imposed when leaders come to town, and Mercedes-Benzes snake through the tree-lined streets in the hills. The police have set up checkpoints around town, and at night they sometimes refuse to allow cars to pass.

One minibus was stopped three times in the middle of the night and told to take a detour to its destination, according to a Chinese business executive who was in the bus. The policemen beamed a searchlight at the bus, searched the luggage of the passengers and asked if anyone had knives

Mr. Deng stays in Lianfeneshan Park, in Mao Zedong's old house, part of a compound of villas where several elderly leaders stay. The Deng villa was apparently renovated a few years ago, according to a Chinese who visited the compound

Beidaihe sleeps in the winter and then booms all summer. Yellow sand beaches are crowded these days with screaming children, old cadres and young couples who come in droves under the guidance, and expense accounts, of their government ministries.

Almost all government departments operate resorts here for employees. Along the beach are the State Council Resort, the Beijing Old Cadres' Sanitarium, the Public Security Resort, and the People's Daily Resort. Beidaihe, a town of 50,000, also has local bureaus of Xinhua News Agency and Guangming

Some of the buildings are high-ceilinged colonial houses built by foreigners early in this century, while others are modern round-windowed compounds partly hidden behind high hedges. Black-eyed susans peer out of flower gardens and darkened windows appear through tufts of trees.

Then in Jacksonville, Mr. Bush said of the Democrats, "Let's see how they can take it. I am going to carry it back to them and take my case to you, the American people. They've had their day, six months of carping and griping and tearing down the United States, and that day is over."

Presented as a "Sunday puzzle" for Mr. Clinton, the statement issued by Ms. Matalin was organized into a series of questions. The last question read, "Which campaign had to spend thousands of taxpayer dollars on private invesigators to fend off bimbo cruptions? The statement said the quotation was based on articles in The Washington Post about Betsey Wright, a Clinton campaign aide who described herself as having in deal with "bimbo eruptions," claims by women that they have had extramarital affairs with Mr. Clinton. The reference to taxpayer dollars appears to have been justified by the Bush campaign on the ground that the presidential candidates use federal funds to help pay for their election campaigns after their ing conventions.

Using other quotations that she attributed to Mr. Clinton, Ms. Matalin then referred indirectly to Mr. Clinton's struggle to keep his weight down.

She wrote: "You feel like a 'one-man landfill?" (Bill Clinton on 'This Week,' 2/16/92) No, Willie, it's not those Wendy's burgers or Dunkin' Donnts or even

The statement cootinued: "We respectfully request you and your fellow Democrat sniveling hypocrites read our lips: SHUT UP AND SIT DOWN so we can get back to more highlights of the Clinton record. If we're at your 'belly button,' (Washington Post, 7/31/92), it feels like Mount Everest compared to your lower-than-a-snake's-belly campaign." It was Ms. Matalin's latest volley in a hotly worded exchange she began last week when she said the campaign had avoided repeating accusations that referred to Mr. Clinton as a "philandering potsmoking draft dodger.

In response to that, the Democratic national chairman, Ronald H. Brown, termed the Bush campaign's recent strategies "state-of-the-art sleaze." Asked about the genesis of the statement released on Sunday, Charles Black, a senior Bush campaign

Republicans Risk Losing the Fabled 'Electoral Lock'

For a generation, Republicans began most presidential campaigns with the comforting knowledge that the South and much of the West were conservative bastions. This dominance in the Sun Belt, where more and more of the votes are, gave the party an enormous edge in winning the White House -what many analysts described as a lock on the Electoral College.

The lock comes from the fact that the Republicans have been nearly certain of winning the states whose electoral votes - the sum of their U.S. senators and House members — taken together account for a majority in the Electoral Col-lege. With this lock, the Republicans, in theory, could lose the national popular vote but still win the presidency through an Electoral College majority.

Now comes the 1992 election, and that Republican base looks decidedly shaky. In the South, a Democratic ticket headed by natives of Arkansas and Tennessee means that Mr. Bush will have to fight for part of that region, which was largely unnecessary when the Democratic nominees were North-

At the same time, Mr. Bush faces a far greater danger in the West: California, in the view of some analysts, is slipping out of the Republi-can reach. With its 54 electoral votes, California accounts for a fifth of the 270 electoral votes needed to win the presidency. Moreover, Mr. Bush continues to suffer repercussions from Ross Per-ot's canceled candidacy in states like Texas that are crucial to Reer, the Texas Republican chairman. I think it's a light in Texas. I think customed to predictions of their predetermined defeat, are quietly euphoric. "Once you remove California from one side of the equation, the electoral lock collapses," said Stan Greenberg, a Clinton poll taker. "If you look now at where Democrats have a base and Republicans have a base, it's almost comparable."

Yet any discussion of the electoral map in early August should be-gin with some caveals: Almost no one believes that Mr. Clinton will sustain for very long the double digit lead that he has in many public-opinion polls, both nationally and in numerous states. Still, the dangers to Bush are

Today, the California economy is ailing, the political mood is angry and Democratic strategists believe they finally see an anchor for a new presidential majority. Add Wash-ington and Oregon, which Michael S. Dukakis carried in 1988, and Democrats could take 72 electoral votes on the West Coast.

Bush-Congress Gridlock Angers Voters

By Helen Dewar

Washington Past Service
WASHINGTON — As President George Bush and members of Congress prepare for the November elections, few can recall a time when relations between the executive and legislative branches of government have been more con-tentious in manner, barren of substance and infuriating to the American people. Their legislative scorecard might read: The soaring U.S. deficit — gridlock.

Violent crime — gridlock.

 Campaign-finance reform — gridlock.
 Revitalizing the nation's public schools More often than not, the Democratic majority in Congress rejects Mr. Bush's proposals, be vetoes proposals from the Democrats, and Congress cannot override the vetoes. Bills are delayed or killed, and vital matters are ignored, trivialized or manipulated for partisan advantage. The more Mr. Bush and Congress slide in the polls, the more they harden their positions, seeking political salvation in hlaming the other side. And the more they engage in what lawmakers of both parties describe as a "blame game," the more they slide in the polls. As a way to describe it, Americans have embraced a word more often associated with traffic jams than governance - "gridlock." "It's the worst I can remember," said Senator David L. Boren, Democrat of Oklahoma, "Pressures have built to the breaking point," he

"There's an unwillingness by both sides to work together," said Senator John H. Chafee, Republican of Rhode Island.

Disputes in Washington also arise from principled, philosophic differences over issues ranging from fiscal policy to the balance between the rights of individuals and the rights of society. But these disputes are often eclipsed by more self-serving interests.

Efforts to reduce the nearly $400 billion budget deficit and the $4 trillion national debt have been torpedoed by political gamesman-ship and sunk by a refusal on the part of the White House and Congress to risk the political consequences of raising taxes or cutting popular spending programs. Attempts to cope with problems in the na-tion's schools have foundered as the Bush administration and Democrats have fought over such issues as whether taxpayer money should be used to help pay for private-school tuition.

Even though voters set the stage for the paralysis by electing a divided government — Republicans to the White House and Democrats to majorities in Congress - lawmakers say the public's impatience with the results ranks near the top of their complaints.

"People say government is not attacking the problems," said the House Democratic leader, Richard A. Gephardt of Missouri. "They're frustrated and looking for the cause of their frustration, and they see it in what they refer to as gridlock." End-the-gridlock-in-Washington has become a kind of mantra for this year's political candidates, including incumbents,

"We must break this gridlock," Mr. Bush said in Universal City, California, on June 20. "The way to do that," he added, "is Republican control of the House, Republican control of the Senate. You give me a Congress like that, and yon watch this country move again."

In a June 4 interview on CNN, the Democratic presidential nominee, Bill Clinton, said he had passed "sweeping economic and educa-tion reform programs" through the state legis-lature as governor of Arkansas and added "I

Vice President Dan Quayle, in a July 22 interview on CNN, went so far as to suggest: "If you're going to vote for Bill Clinton, I'd say vote for your Democratic congressman."

"It's a controversial viewpoint, and it's not shared by all the people in my party," he added.
"But I think we must end the divided govern-

This debate about gridlock ignores accomplishments by Congress that range from civil rights for the disabled to new clean-air rules during President Ronald Reagan's last two years and Mr. Bush's first two years. It also ignores the likelihood that the record of the 102d Congress will look far better when it adjourns in October than it looks now.

But the damning rhetoric about Washington strikes a responsive chord with million of Americans because the behavior of the White House and Congress constantly reinforces the public's suspicions.

Congress raised its pay — and a majority of House members enjoyed free overdrafts at the now-defunct House Bank — while the budget deficit careened out of control. After 500 Years, Time Passes By Cairo Coffee Houses

By Chris Hedges New York Times Service

CAIRO - Two centuries of grime cake the walls of the Fishawi coffee house. Beneath the slow whirl of ceiling fans, a few patrons burble into their water papes and old men huddle over domino boards, clinking their tiles and sip-ping thick Turkish coffee.

The scene, seemingly as immutable as the Nile itself, has characterized Cairo for more than 500 years. But the coffee houses that once dominated Egypt's social and political life are fast becoming relics.

In the Tawfik coffee shop, founded in 1945, patrons once listened each evening to the classic songs of the singer Om Kolthoum on an old reel-to-reel tape deck. But the player stopped working five years ago, and the only sounds now come from the cacophony of cars and buses that rumble and screech along Orabi Street.

The silencing of Om Kolthoum is emblematic of the end of a way of "The decay of the Om Kolthoun coffee house is part of the transformation of our society," said Mediha Safti, a professor of sociology at the American University in Cairo. "No one has time now to sit for hours listening to Om Kolthoum. People are too preoccupied with their daily problems. This is a life style that few people can still af-novels of Naguib Mahfour, the No-bel laurente. The Egyptian writer said coffee shops once gave him the material for much of his fiction.

"Before radio and television, people used to go to the coffee shops and listen to story tellers who played a musical instrument and told of folk heroes," he said. "These events filled the role played by television serials today."

But even men who sat as boys with their fathers while they conducted business in coffee houses rarely set foot in them today.

"My father was the mayor of a small town and when he came to Cairo, he would sit in his coffee house and the people who wanted to see him would come by," said Mohammed Shaalan, a psychiatrist. "But the streets are too crowded and noisy. Sitting in a coffee house in Cairo is no longer a pleasant experience."

The coffee houses, often no more than a few dozen rickety wicker chairs and small metal tables, now serve the poor.

The poor man goes to the coffee house because he can find something cheap to entertain himself with, like a cup of tea," Mr. Mahfouz said. Tea or coffee costs about 5 cents, a bit of tobacco for the water pipe about 30 cents.

It began after armed units of the fundamentalists significantly in-creased their attacks on security officials, killing scores of people in the last year, including several se-nior police officers and more than 30 Christian Copts.

In Algeria, a somewhat lenient sentence handed down in July by a military court against the two top leaders of the Islamic Salvation Front has failed to take the edge off the confrontation between security forces and armed fundamentalists. The Front argued for the imme-

In a preliminary decision last month, the Raad van State ruled that the municipality of Noordoostpolder must pay a monthly supend of 65 guilders ($38) to a handicapped man who has reportedly suffered mental anguish from the absence of sexual contact. The money is to be used to defray the cost of a once-a-month visit to a "sexual aid worker" who charges 150 guilders for a 90-minute session.

Not surprisingly, the municipality of Noor-doostpolder had been resisting the efforts of the

Tudjman Heading To Croatia Victory

By Blaine Harden

hington Post Service ZAGREB, Croatia -- President Franjo Tudiman of Croatia, who led the republic through a shatter-ing war with Serbia and won international recognition for it as an independent nation, appeared Monday to have won a solid vic-tory in a presidential election.

Mr. Todjman, a 70-year-old for-mer Communist Yugoslav general who likes to be called the father of modern Croatia, won about 56 per-cent of the vote, and his ruling party got a working majority in

By sticking with Mr. Tudjman and his Cruatian Democratic Union, the electorate showed a clear unwillingness to change leadership in the midst of what remains a volatile and highly militarized stand-off in the ruins of the former Yugoslavia.

The war with the Serbian-dominated Yugoslav Army has wrecked Croatia's tourist-dependent economy, caused some $18 billion in property damage, killed more than 10,000 people and allowed Serbs to seize a quarter of Croatia's territo-

Another signal of the public's interest in peace, as opposed to revenge, was the surprising lack of voter support for the far-right Cro-atian Party of Rights.

Its leader, Dobroslav Paraga, who often punctuated his campaign rallies with Nazi-style, stiffarm salutes, had vowed to bomb the Serbian capital, Belgrade, and make the Serbs suffer as Croats suffered during the war.

But Mr. Paraga and his party attracted far fewer votes than polls and jubilant mass rallies had indicated. Mr. Paraga himself won about 5 percent of the presidential vote, and his party, which won only about 7 percent of the vote cast in parliamentary elections, will not be a significant factor in decision-

The voting over the weekend weekend was a case study in how far Mr. Tudjman's government has yet to travel before it joins the democratic community of reforming governments in Eastern Europe.

of disharmony at a time when the United Nations is more heavily engaged around the world than at any other time in its history.

It has caused bitter and personal recriminations, undermined a sensitive UN dialogue with Libya recently and injected a level of discord that could further disrupt and delay critical Security Council decisions, sev-eral UN officials and diplomats said. The United Nations has major operations in Cambodia, Iraq, the Western Sahara and now in a dismembered Yugoslavia. It is also involved in long operations in Cyprus and Lebanon and is undertaking new efforts in Somalia and South Africa.

All of these have deepened the financial crisis brought on by the $2 billion in arrears from donor nations, including $800 million from the United States. One Western diplomat has described the secretary-general's recent actions as "petu-lant," "inflexible" and "disingenuous." Others have faulted him for being prickly, "arrogant" and "aloof." Mr. Butros Ghali was no less blunt, point-ing out that the Security Council had for the most part acceded to his views on the Balkans crisis and Somalia. He bristled at the criticism he has received recently in the British press and wondered aloud in an interview if it was "maybe because I'm a wog," using the 19th-century British pejorative for darkskinned colonial subjects.

His characterizations stamped UN offiists characterizations the hirst of atheir

His characterizations stummed UN officials, who avoid even the hint of ethnic epithet. Sir Brian Urquhart, the longtime UN undersecretary who is now at the Ford Foundation, could only gasp on hearing of Mr. Butros Ghair's reference to a possible "wog" factor, "My, my ... dear me"

"The problem is, One, the ego of certain members of the Security Council are accustomed to being treated in a certain way. Secondly, because maybe I don't spend enough time with them, certainly this is the second reason. But the simple explanation is high policy, the policy of the states."

He further explained, saying: "When a country is in difficulty with its public opinion concerning what to do in Yugoslavia, or

Asked if he meant that too many countries were hoisting their problems and frustrations onto the United Nations, he said: "Certainly, to the secretary-general, to the UN."

He suggested that a combination of what he termed "Europecentrism" and the inability of Third World nations to address their conomic and social ills was the greatest obstacle to building an effective UN program for the future.

"The real problem of the next 10 years will be mainly in the countries of the Third World," he said, "and the problems of the Third World is not only the military confrontations but the problem of refugees, hunger. drought. So many problems."

"If we continue to get involved in Yugo-slavia, this will be at the expense of the other activity of the house," he said. "At a certain time, we must say, 'Stop.'" With the United Nations' perennial short-age of money, Mr. Butros Ghali warned in May that "our plate is full" and that any new peacekeeping responsibilities would have to come at the expense of other relief and peacekeeping efforts. Then, on July 17, the Security Council, with Mr. Butros Ghali absent, accepted a cease-fire accord for Yugoslavia hammered out by Lord Carrington of Britain and a European Community team of negotiators in London. The accord, which failed to stop the fighting, would have placed a significant burden on the United Nations by sending its forces into the combat zone to find and assemble under guard the heavy guns pounding Sara-jevo, the capital of Bosnia-Herzegovina. When Mr. Butros Ghali learned of the Security Council's action, he objected, arguing that collecting the gons would take three mouths and 1,100 men.

He also said he feared that such actions would draw UN forces into a what he termed "a new Vietnam" that would strain UN resources at a time when they were needed elsewhere, particularly in starving Somalia. T believe it is my duty to put the mini-mm pressure on the Europeans to say, Try

The UN Charter, Mr. Butros Ghali has become fond of saying, states that "the regional organizations" like the European Community and the Western European Union "are at the service of the United Nations, not that the United Nations is at the service of the regional organizations."

Sir Brian Urquhart, the former UN un-derscretary, said he thought Mr. Butros Ghali was right to be upset about the way the London accord on Bosnia had been handled. You cannot suddenly tell a guy who is esponsible for a peacekeeping operation that you are going to add an enormous burden to a group that is hopelessly over-stressed," he said. At the same time, he added that he thought it "very odd" for the secretary-gencral to "widen the issue" by accusing the Security Council of being Eurocentric.

"I think he is under great pressure," he said. "The European efforts to deal with Yugoslavia have been hopeless, and it may be useful for them to blame the UN if nothing is happening." There was more than a hint of scorn in Mr. Butros Ghali's voice over the refusal of Lord

Despite the problems, the secretary-general predicted that his "controversy" with the Security Council would pass. "This is quite exaggerated," he said, "and I will say it is healthy."

Where's the beef?

INTERNATIONAL HERALD TRIBUNE, TUESDAY, AUGUST 4, 1992

Foreign corporations expanding in Europe face truly difficult decisions.

If you want a choice slice of Europe, where will you start looking?

For one, are marketing activities your goal or do you plan to set up manufacturing operations? Then there is the question of acquisition versus building up your own organization from scratch.

And finally, you will be faced with the most difficult yet perhaps most important problem:

. Where is the best place in Europe for you to locate?

The EC's Single Market is about to become reality, to be followed later by a single currency and a European central bank. Recently a treaty was signed with the EFTA countries establishing the European Economic Area (EEA) that will unite all of Western Europe - a unified market with 377 million consumers, accounting for 30 % of global GNP and a full 43 % of the world's international trade. Moreover the new democracies of Central and Eastern Europe are busily establishing free market economies and attracting private investment.

Europe is in a state of flux. It is clearly the right time to establish a market foothold - to stake out your claim to a choice slice of the market.

Many attractive official promotional programs have been set up to encourage foreign investment. There are also a number of local companies that might be attractive partners or potential acquisition targets. The problem is to objectively assess all the opportunities in order to determine the best fit for your company.

Enter Dresdner Bank, one of Germany's principal banks and a major European financial institution - an international bank truly "at home" throughout the Continent.

Our extensive network and teams of experienced local specialists can provide you with crucial support - everything from overcoming the language barrier to helping you pin down the ideal site for your new business operations.

For professional consulting support, you can rely on the services of our two management consulting subsidaries:

And through our specialized international bank in Luxembourg, Europa Bank AG, we can put together complex packages including various regional European subsidies and EC support programs, thereby satisfying the most demanding of financing requirements.

The Moral Imperative

Horrific images and early reminiscent accounts are flowing out of the Bosnian war, reminiscent, more and more witnesses are saying, of the Nazi era. In the areas marked out by Serbian forces for so-called "ethnic cleansing," 2½ million people have been forced to leave their homes. Before they leave, usually at gunpoint (so say scores of refugees who have reached asylum in Croatia, Germany or Austria), they must sign papers saying they abandoned home and possessions voluntarily.

In areas where Muslims, Croats and Serbs coexisted for centuries, entire non-Serb villages have been emptied and the inhabitants (mostly Muslims) deported in sealed box-cars. Some prisoners have spent up to four days on trains without food or sanitation facilities, and others, turned back at borders, have been crammed into refugee camps opcrating at three and four times capacity.

In Gorazde, a mostly Muslim town cut off by Serbian shelling, 75,000 civilians are trapped and sending out frantic radio appeals for international assistance. The help they want is military, a humanitarian aid convoy from the office of the United Nations high commissioner for refugees, carrying food, attempted to reach them but was attacked and forced to turn back.

Images like these have not come out of Europe since a war whose depredations and atrocities, it has been agreed again and again, would never be allowed to recur. The analogy is more than just pictorial. Like then, the massive displacement of desperate people is not, as in most wars, n side effect of the conflict but its major purpose. Serbi-an leaders have said openly to UN observers that they aim to expel all non-Serbs from the lands they hold and bring in more Serbian inhabitants later. Prewar Bosnia was roughly 44 percent Muslim, 13 percent Croat; some areas now being "cleansed" are 80 percent Muslim.

For those who look back at World War II with perplexity, who wonder and cannot grasp how the world stood by, it is now possible to observe several forms of mertia that are playing a role. For Americans, it is all too easy to view the Yugoslav tragedy as a far-off, impenetrable and even perhaps faintly comical ethnic muddle, source of clever words like "balkanization" to apply to other regions and of endless, poplace-names. The many-sided politics of the war are in fact stupelyingly complex, and talk of possible military action, such as easing sieges by bombing Serbian artillery: emplacements, bogs down swiftly in practi-cal and political calculations. But the Bosnians' situation at this point is neither comical nor theoretical; they are people upon whom unbelievable and impermissible barbarities are being visited by an army whose stated purpose no civilized government can condone. The State Department in June called the "ethnic cleansing" policy "totally abhorrent and savage," but throughout dennuciations, sanctions and UN presence the outrage has, if anything escalated. The practical difficulties and the politics of going further remain complicated and ambiguous, but what the Serbs are doing is not. The moral imperative to somehow stop them is overwhelming.

The Voyager Persisted

"We departed Friday the third day of August of the year 1492 from the bar of Saltes at the eighth hour." Thus, in Colum-bus's own words, did the Niña, Pinta and Santa Maria set ont 500 years ago from the little Spanish port of Palos de la Frontera on a voyage that would change the world.

Ten weeks later, in the small hours of Oct. 12, a crewman aboard the Pinta sighted land, at last, and the three ships lowered sail to wait for daylight. "At dawn," Columbus wrote in his journal, "we saw naked people, and I went ashore in the ship's boat, armed."

That Columbus kept a journal is remarkable in uself; so far as is known, he was the first explorer to do so. The original, which be presented to Queen Isabella, has been lost; likewise the copy that royal scribes made for Columbus. But the essential content, much of it verbatim, survives in Ma-drid's Biblioteca Nacional in a detailed abstract of the duplicate copy.

This priceless documentation was done by Bartolome de Las Casas, a Dominican friar and friend of the Columbus family, who spent years recording West Indies history and exposing Spain's mistreatment of the natives. The best English translation was published in 1989 by Oliver Duna and James. Kelley, two American scholars; another, Robert Foson, has done a more fluid, less precise version, fleshed out with detail from other writings by Las Casas and Columbus's son Fernando, and transposed into an imagined first-person parrative throughout.

From these two works one learns, for example, what Columbus thought when the Pinta's rudder broke on the third day out: sabotage, by her owner and a crewman.

"Neither of these men wanted to make this voyage," be wrote, "and even before we departed Palos they attempted to delay or prevent the enterprise."

The damage forced a long layover in the Canary Islands while Columbus sought another ship and finally repaired the rudder. After four weeks' delay, the westward voyage resumed on Sept. 6.
Sept. 9: Mindful of the crews' marginal ment to his mission, Columbus admits in his journal that he plans to give them false reports on each day's progress, so that "they might not think themselves so great a distance from Spain as they really were." Sept. 15: "I saw a marvelous meteorite fall into the sea." To some of the crew it was a bad omen. He told them not to worry; he had seen many before. But in private he wrote, "I have to confess that this is the closest a falling star has ever come to my ship."

Sept. 23: Concern for his own safety. Inconstant winds and a flat sea have "led the men to believe we will never get home," he wrote, "Later, when the sea made up. considerably without wind, they were astonished. I saw this as a sign from God. As with Moses when he led his people out of captivity, my people were hour

Not for long. The next day he says "a few trusted men (and these are few in number!)" have reported talk of throwing him overboard some night if he persists in sailing on.

The AIDS Feud Again

The Americans and the French are bickering over more than NATO these days. They are also reviving an old fend over the discovery of the AIDS virus. It is an argument that drags in complex science, prickly personalities, the pride of nations and. of course, money.

For years, Robert Gallo and his laboratory at the National Cancer Institute have been described as "co-discoverers" of the AIDS virus. They have been sharing the boner — and the patent royalties from the blood tests - with Luc Montagnier and his lab at the Pasteur Institute in Paris. Unfortunately, it was not collegiality that led to the mutual recognition but legal actions.

The great race to find the cause of AIDS was characterized more by fierce competition than by friendly collaboration. The American and French laboratories, filled with various isolates, cultures and viral contaminants, were working toward the same conclusion at about the same time. But it was Dr. Gallo, in a highly publicized press conference, who first seized credit for the discovery. The French, who already had filed a patent application for a diagnostic test to detect AIDS antibodies, grew disgruntled and suspicious. The virus identi-fied by Dr. Gallo was remarkably similar to an isolate sent to him by Dr. Montagnier.

What ensued was a messy legal battle over blood test patents and a heated personal and political battle over credit that continues today — despite a 1987 settle-ment agreement that stipulates the royalty distributions. For years, Dr. Gallo was coy about the scientific value of the Pasteur samples, saying that they were not the ori-gin of his discovery. He steadfastly refused to acknowledge fully the French contribution. Then last year he made an admission in the journal Nature: The virus "discovered" in his laboratory was indeed the virus isolated and identified by Dr. Montagnier.

This belated admission changes everything, the French claim. The Pasteur Institute now wants the royalties reallocated in its favor. The $1 million or $2 million more a year would mean far more to the small private French lab than it would to the U.S. Department of Health and Human Services and its sprawling research institutes.

The U.S. government apparently hesitates to renegotiate the settlement agreement, in part because of the continuing investigations, civil and criminal, surrounding Dr. Gallo's conduct at the time of the patent application and later on. The recurring question: What did Dr. Gallo and U.S. representatives know, and when did they know it? Allegations of perjury and patent fraud dog Dr. Gallo.

The inquiries are important, and they should lead to answers. Meanwhile, renowned scientists on both sides of the Atlantic are diverted from the most urgent inquiry of all — the clusive cure for AIDS. The quest for reward should not quash the spirit of scientific cooperation that both teams once pledged to uphold.

To Stop the Serbs

It is widely claimed that the use of military means could not end the Serbian aggression. Absurd scenarios for a land war are designed to give the West an alibi. The Serbian chief of staff uses this Western self-deterrence to threaten "resistance to the last man" in the case of "an attack against Yugoslavia."
What absurd theater. Neither masses of troops nor an occupation are needed. It would be enough to prevent the use of Serbian heavy weapons. The West has the means and weapons. Air attacks against firing positions, depots, supply routes, headquarters and airfields would do.

President Bush has been a vertable front Minister Chamberlain in refusing to face the challenge in Yugoslavia. He has dithered, deferred to a Europe that was looking to him for leadership, refused to call for the international military action that everyone knows is the only way to stop the Serbian aggression. The excuse for his maction has been that the Serbian war on the other peoples of what was Yneoslavia has not aroused the American public. But Americans were not greatly exercised about Iraq's occupation of Kuwait, either — until George Bush skillfully used all his powers as president to bring the country into the Gulf War. But there was all in Kuwait, the Bush people say, and there is no such American interest in Yngoslavia. No, nothing except the Enropean stability that has been at the heart of America's international policy for decades.

Again it is argued that the ethnic situation in what was Yngoslavia is complicated. True. But the essence of what has happened there is simple. Michael T. Kaufman of The New York Times, after traveling in four of the Yugoslav republics, wrote:

"What has been going on is fundamentally a Serbian war of aggression waged largely against civilians

... It is guns and ammunition supplied by Beigrade that are killing civilians in areas beyond the borders of Serbia ... Serbian forces everywhere have re-sorted to the same tactic of sustained artillery shelling of cities, towns and villages."

President Bush compared Saddam Hussein to that T. I am against such managers, because they cheapen the Holocaust. But if that one is to be used, it better fits the Serbian leader, Slobodan Milosevic, the inventor of "ethnic cleansing."

Mr. Clinton's statement took up ideas suggested by many international observers. The economic blockade of Serbia should be tightened, he said. The United States should ask the United Nations Security Council to authorize air strikes against those who attack relief convoys, as the Serbs have been doing. American forces should be lent to that operation. And Mr. Milosevic should be charged under inter-national law with "crimes against humanity."

If Mr. Bush had had the courage or the vision to act, the honor in Yugoslavia would have ended long ago. When Serbian gunners began lobbing shells into Dubrovnik a year ago, a few air strikes would have stopped them — and headed off the tragedy that has followed.

In denouncing Mr. Clinton last week for his call to action in Yugoslavia — action long overdine — the Bush campaign inadvertently advertised its own candidate's inability to respond to new reali-ties in the world. It showed George Bush for what he is: yesterday's man.

Clearly, It's Too Much to Expect From a UN Force

By Frederick Bonnart

BRUSSELS — The worsening situation in Yugoslavia, internal war, famine and disintegration in Somalia, and bloody conflicts in other parts of the world have resulted in calls for a United Nations rapid intervention force. UN Secretary-General Butros Butros Ghali has called for a body of volunteers, able to reach trouble spots within 48 hours. Commentators have proposed a mobile UN force strong enough, in the words of a New York Times editorial (IHT.

July 24), "to quell the warlords The project sounds plausible, but three main considerations should be examined: the size and cost of such a force, its purpose and the range of possible tasks, and the political consequences of a successful completion

A force of committed soldiers with a primary loyalty to the United Na-tions could undoubtedly be raised. The best existing example is the French Foreign Legion, which gathers in a moticy crew of fit young men of different nationalities and back-grounds, who are melded together in a military unit in which the prime requirement is absolute loyalty to the Legion. Its record contains many fine BERKELEY, California — Was the Chemobyl nuclear disaster only the first of many? A recent UN report raises the ominous prospect of 40 more Chemobyla in the former Soviet Union and Central En-rope. Plainly, the large number of poorly designed, dangerously out-dated nuclear power plants in that part of the world poses a major threat to health and safety.

It is a complex problem but one in which a few of the answers are surprisingly simple. Consider just one: a better light bulb. In the former Soviet Union, lighting alone consumes an amount of energy comparable to that produced by 40

Chemobyl-type plants. Much of this lighting is produced in the most energy-wasteful way imaginable. Efficient, compact fluorescent lamps, or CFLs, are almost unknown in the former Soviet states.

In North America, sales of such lamps will approach 35 million this year and in Europe, 90 million. CFLs are similar in size and provide the same amount of light as common incandescent lamps, but they consume one-fourth the energy.

Depending on their use in the former Soviet Union, these lamps could save the power produced by about examples of devotion and self-sacrifice. To create this essential spirit, discipline is strict and training rigorous. The Legion is self-contained, com-plete with its own annor, artillery, engineers, signals and logistic arm. It has its own training establishment, but its officers are largely drawn from other French regiments, and heavier support is provided by the parent army. Such an infrastructure can be accommodated inside national forces, but it would be a heavy burden for the United Nations.

If its mission were restricted to "peacekeeping," it could be modeled on the present UN forces, and consist of infantry only. In most cases in the past, UN miantry bettalions of contributing countries have been deployed without their own battalion support weapons, such as armored fighting vehicles, medium machine guns, mortars, light anti-tank and anti-siteraft guns.

This would be the least costly solution, but the force would have to rely on UN member states for transport to and from the crisis area, as well as for intelligence and logistic support.

Simple Ideas Can Avoid Chernobyls

There are obstacles: a lack of hard currency, the financial risks that accompany technological change and the challenge of implementation. But there are lar more serious obstacles facing those who would try to fix the existing nuclear plants or find acceptable alternatives to them. In the end, economics tip the scales toward increasing efficiency. We appland the West's growing concern about the problem, but the new proposals to spend $10 billion to $20 billion on supply-side fixes are misguided. A less costiy approach is to first invest in improved efficiency.

For $1 billion, a hundred million compact fluorescent lamps could be diverted to the former Soviet Union from Western markets. Each $1 billion thus spent would allow five nu-

dear plants to be closed.

Or the West could solve the hard-currency problem by financing con-struction of, say, 10 CFL factories

(at $7 million each) in the former Soviet Union. Joint ventures be-

It could be deployed only with the full accord of all warring parties and would have to withdraw if any of them no longer agreed to its presence. It would be ineffective against wellequipped insurgents who decided to structions from political chiefs.

When not deployed, the troops would have to be housed, fed, paid and well trained to maintain efficiency and morale. Once engaged, they would not be available for other tasks. If they were deployed in Bosnia, for instance, they could not simultaneously act in Somalia. They would, in fact, be no more or less effective than the present arrangement - and a good deal more expensive.

If the force were to be strong enough to be able to quell warlords, it would have to have not only its battalion heavy wespons but also the whole gamut of modern armed forces. This means armor, artillery, engineers, signals, transport, medica and other services, as well as combat sincraft and helicopters. Even then, it would have to rely on member coun-

A force like this could engage in major combat. However, the question of size must be posed. How big would it have to be to intervene in Bosnia-Herzegovina with a peace-enforcing mission? Estimates to guarantee the safety of Sarajevo air-

If it were to engage Serbian irregulars, perhaps a division-size force of 20,000 would make an initial impact. But if the lighting spread, far more might be needed. Crostian, Bosnian, Albanian or other irredentist groups might also have to be countered. How and from where would the essential reserves be provided? Again, once committed on one task, the force would not be available for another, and when not engaged it would have to be kept in reserve.

But the crucial question must be the purpose of its employment. Military force is one means, usually the last, to achieve a political aim. If the answer is "to make peace," the next question is, "What thea?" The Gulf War has shown the dangers of selecting a simple mission and trying to ignore the political consequences.

A peace-cuforcing mission in places like Yugoslavia or Somalia would leave behind devastated areas, destroyed economies, hordes of dis-placed persons and no political sys-tem. The United Nations would then have to take on the role of administering the country, feeding and housing the population, restarting economies from scratch and imposing a political doctrine until the different groups were considered mature enough to produce visible nations.

To the question "Is the United Nations ready for this?" no answer neen be given.

of 1989, we see the world's problems or planning to resolve them. The contrast with the sequel to World War II — from which the world. emerged with ambitious plans, effectively modified in 1947-49 — isstriking. The similarity to the years after World War I is considerable.

One factor that some economists? and historians (notably Charlesus Kindleberger) see in the period that led to the world catastrophes of the 1 1930s and 1940s is the lack, after it World War I, of any country willing:v to provide world economic leadership; a country that could be, both literally and figuratively, the lender of last resort, as Britain was for legenerations. The United States, the one country then capable of playing that role, abdicated from it, for rea-sons that included international political irresponsibility and a govern-... ment unprepared for such a part. " In many ways, America now a wherewithal to assume international economic leadership; Japan. But no one wishes to accord Tokyo that role; and Japan itself, now in an economic position somewhat like that of the United States in the 1920s, seems to be as unprepared and unwilling to lead, now, as the United States was then. No one can say that the parallels with the 1920s will continue. Perhaps democracy will survive intact. Perhaps the world economy will resume growing and become more integrated rather than less. Perhaps the nations of the world will find the "new order" that was promised, and peace and stability. not conflict and chaos, will result. But at this bleak moment, when war is raging in several parts of the old Communist empire; when econ-omics are troubled and growth prospects appear limited; when the effort to preserve and extend free trade in the Uruguay Round of talks is being stymicd; when the economic powers of the world, convened at Munich, seemed more intent on avoiding contention than providing real leadership; when there is an obvious mismatch between economic power and political responsibility in such a moment, another 1929, another 1933, even another 1939, do not seem impossible.

To a Mile French Foreign Policy: Clinton Needs to Improve WASHINGTON - When By George F. Will Mr. Bush is son reluctant to intervene in Iratricide? Do they think U.S. policy should aim at — what? U.S. policy should aim at — what?

luck, he replied: "Of course. How else do you explain the success of those you don't like?" George Bush will be forgiven for believing that Bill Clinton has of late been lucky.

After the Bush campaign tried, for several weeks, with scant success, to portray Mr. Clinton as a crypto-leftist on domestic policy, events in Baghdad and the Balkans suddenly shifted attention to foreign policy. And up popped Mr. Clinton to the right of Mr. Bush.

Regarding foreign policy, the Cold War defined the political spectrum in terms of opposition to aggressive left-wing regimes, so "the right" came to mean readiness for ambitious U.S. interventibns, perhaps involving military actions. In the short run, at least, Mr. Clinton may benefit from seeming to be "to the right" by suggesting that U.S. efforts against Baghdad and on behalf of and that on the most recent signifi-Bosnia are insufficient. But there cant foreign policy decision, the aumay be an opportunity for Mr. thorization of Desert Storm, most

By suggesting U.S. military sup-port for United Nations-sanctioned air strikes against Serbian attacks on relief efforts in Bosnia, Mr. Clinton seemed to put the Democratic Party on the muscular side of a draw the fangs of Republicans who relish saying that the most recent Democratic president invaded a vast country with eight belicopters.

People Want New Ideas For a Different World

By Richard Reeves

N EW YORK — The Democrat should memorize these lines tracted by throw weights, jungle infrom The Economist: "Because he is young, from a generation formed Woodstock and Vietnam rather than Yalta and Cuba, his mind is uncluttered hy the debris of the Cold War, and his view of the world is fresh. Many will think it high time that a man of his age and ontlook woke the nation up."

Why is Bill Chinton so anxious to debate George Bush on comparisons between Beirut and Sarajevo? Why is he so anxious to project 20-20 hindsight on the final hours of the Gulf War? Perhaps he wants to prove that he really did graduate from the School of Foreign Service at Georgetown University. The argument against U.S. policy in Iraq was not whether the coalition should continue to slaughter people on the road from Kuwait to Baghdad — while the whole world watched and British pilots were re-- := fusing to fly murder sorties. The argument was whether young Am-:: c ericans should risk their lives to de-the White House suppidity that con-vinced Saddam Hussein that Ku-

New thinking is what the Ameri-...... can people seem to want from the Democrats on both domestic and - foreign policy -in that order.

date Richard Nixon being told in 1960 that he should not talk too much about foreign policy because what matters on election day is "the price of hogs in St. Louis," On the other hand, as Democratic candidates must be repeatedly reminded, you cannot run for president of the Department of Health and Human Services

Surgencies and counterinsurgencies.

No one wants details from Bill Clinton. Americans got that from Jimmy Carter. They want — the new cliche — an attitude, Mr. Clinton has good men (soon, one hopes, good women) to keep abreast of details, history and continuity — from advisers like Anthony Lake and Michael Mandelbaum to older wise men like Warren Christopher,

What the next president must provide is what Ronald Reagan provided; a coherent view of America's new role in a new world. But this is a new time, and Mr. Clinton's vision has to begin with the realization by his countrymen that in many foreign matters in the furnite it will not matter what the president of the United States wants, or even what the American people want, Other peoples are going to do what they want to do, and America can change that in only two ways: with young fighting men or young ideas.

On a flight from Chicago to San Francisco recently, Mr. Clinton said: "I just don't think that either side should play a lot of politics with this country's foreign policy. We ought to be working to develop bipartisan foreign policy ... and attention ought to be turned to the incredible problems of Americans here at home."

Bush, groggy though he is, at last Democrats took a position to the to land a punch in America's first left of the United Nations.

In appearing to be to the right of There is an old story of candi- Mr. Bush, Mr. Clinton was helped - this is becoming a pattern - by the hapless Marlin Fitzwater. He was sent forth to lambaste Mr. Clinton, but did so without understanding that Mr. Clinton had said approximately what Defense Secre-tary Dick Cheney and Senator Richard Lugar (acting ranking minority member on the Foreign Relations Committee) have said.

Meanwhile, Saddam Hussein's comning continues to tarnish the achievement of which Mr. Bush is most proud. Merely by continuing to draw breath - never mind tormenting the enforcers of the ceasefire agreement - Saddam allows Democrats to call attention to the Bush administration's "coddling" of him (Mr. Clinton's word) before his invasion of Kuwait.

But three things must be said on Mr. Bush's behalf. First, when Iraqi aggression ocarred, Mr. Bush responded better than most Democrats did.

Second, it is implausible to suggest, as many Democrats do, that a few more hours of the Desert Storm offensive would have solved the problem of Iraq. Because Mr. Bush stopped when he did, young Americans are not now patrolling the back alleys of Baghdad. Mr. Bush remembers better than his critics evidently do how deeply America became involved in Sout Vietnam's future by being impli-cated in the 1963 assassination of Ngo Dinh Diem. It is difficult to disengage from a country whose regime you have changed. Third, regarding the fissionable Balkans, do Democrats want to say

Planting the delicate orchid of democracy in the stony soil of south central Europe? Last week Mr. Clinton said "America is being ridiculed around the world." Oh? American political ideas and social and cultural values, expressed in American cadences (often those of the 3d and 16th presidents), are being em-braced around the world. Who are the ridiculers, and who gives a tinker's damn about their opinion? Does Mr. Clinton?

Perhaps Mr. Clinton is just again indulging his Kennedy fixa-tion. In 1960, candidate John Kennedy made much of some polis purporting to show a decline in America's "prestige." That was fatuous, and Mr. Clintoo's similar lament about ridicule is not less so. Bot it may betoken a differ-ence for Mr. Bush to dwell on. Americans believe in three kinds:

of progress - material, intellectual and moral. Periodically Americans regard foreign policy as a realm for pursuing that third kind. The theory is that this nation "dedicated to a proposition" is committed to a foreign policy that tries to uni-versalize that proposition in the form of democracy.

Perhaps Mr. Clinton will promise a foreign policy oriented to lofty values rather than concrete interests. That will leave President Bush leaning on the ropes but standing on a recognizably conservative principle: Abroad as at home, the power of government to do good is limited.

Back to the Places Where Many Died

OSLO — As we grow older, we are tempted to become more preoccupied with the past than the future. I have tried to resist this but without complete success. In an effort to come to terms with my experiences during World War II, which took me from Utah Beach to Munich, I am working on a book. I plan to publish it myself, using my trusty computer and laser printer.

Its point of departure will be the copious letters I sent to my parents, which they saved but I have until recently avoided reading. These will be supplemented by my recollections, some of which are still very sharp. Since, bowever, a half-century has intervened. I am reinforcing my memory with research. After completing the chapters which car-ried me from the landing to the liberation of Paris, I developed a craving to see some of the places where my more unforgettable experiences took place. Hence, my loyal Norwegian wife Else and I visited Normandy in June. For those who did not experience World War II, all this may seem remote. Wrong. With the half-century mark of the end of the wat coming over the horizon, no one will be able to escape my generation's last hurrah Furthermore, the approach in 1994 of the 50th anniversary of our landing in Normandy raises some questions that allied officials, particularly French, should be thinking about.

After I examined a map of Normandy, it became clear that a central point for the places I wanted to visit was Saint-Lô, which American forces devastated in the process of liberating. Through a friend, we located the ideal place to spend our nights, the Château de la Roque, just northwest of Saint-Lô. This charming inn lies in the area that was heavily bombed by allied planes in Operation Cobra on July 25, 1944, to prepare the way for our breakout from the beachhead. As a result not all of the original structure is there today.

From the um we salked forth each day. A prime objective was Utah Beach. We had visitBy John C. Ausland ed it previously in 1984, for the 40th anniversary of the landing. Then it was crowded. This time we all but had the beach to ourseives.

It is difficult to convey the feelings that a visit to the Utah Beach evokes. June 6, 1944. is a day etched in my memory, and it is hard for me to talk about what happened without some tears. For one thing, even before the 29th Field Artillery Battalion got ashore, a landing craft carrying one of our batteries hit a mine, and most of the men aboard were lost.

Another day, Else and I set out to find an area in which the 8th Iofantry Regiment made an ill-advised night attack across a swamp on a German strong point. The attack failed miserably, with heavy casualties. Thanks to the excellent maps which accompany the official U.S. Army series of books on World War II, we found the general area with little difficulty.

While we were exploring the swamp, Jean-Marie de Pierrepont, who lives in the area, volunteered his assistance. So I was able to survey the swamp from where the infantry battalion, to which I was attached as artillery haison officer, had its forward headquarters that night. I could still hear our artillery shells arching overhead, only to be answered by German mortar and machine gun fire. In between there were the cries of pain from our wounded in the swamp.

We drove around the swamp to the area the Germans had occupied. I had visited it during the war, shortly after the Germans withdrew. The bodies of American dead were piled up like cordwood, with some earth sprinkled over them. Nearby lay a German soldier whose head lay several feet from his body.

My greatest difficulty was in locating a farmhouse near the Saint-Lo-Periers road, which was the bomb line for Operation Cobra on July 25. On July 24, I had barely escaped being killed by an artillery shell, Had Captain Claude Mercer, who lay wounded on the floor of a shed, not screamed at me to get out of the doorway. I would not be here today. When our first efforts to find this farm failed, we sought the help of Henri Levaufre at Periers. Mr. Levaufre has devoted many years to belping veterans find places of importance to them, usually where they were wounded. With his help, we found our way to the farm of Bernard Lejamtel. From him and Mrs. Lejamtel we learned that the shed for which I had been looking had been remodeled after the war. During all this searching, we found the French people just as kind and helpful as they were during the war, even though we had helped the Germans destroy their homes. This has led me to wonder why the French have been so reluctant to show official gratitude to some of the American units involved in Operation Overlord, which opened the way to the liberation of France.

In 1950, the French authorities awarded their fourragere to a number of American units. It is however, difficult to divine its criteria. The 82d Airborne Division was on the list. The men of the 101st, who also jumped from aircraft over Normandy in the early hours of June 6, were not. The First Infantry Division, which was also on the list, richly deserved any recognition it got. But what about the 29th, which also landed on Omaha Beach, and the 4th, which made the assault on Utah?

With the 50th anniversary of the landing still two years away, the French should seize the hance to expand the awards made in 1950. While they are at it, they should consider whether they would like the allies to invite whoever is German chancellor in 1994 to the ceremonies. Chancellor Helmut Kohl's request to artend in 1984 was rebuffed. With the changes that are taking place in the world. this will not be so easy in 1994.

To help get over this hurdle and to make the ceremonies more appropriate to the present, I suggest that they not be held on the beaches. Rather they should take place near some of the cemeteries. This way, we would not be giorifying the fighting but honoring the dead.

Some of the things you'll need if you call home without Sprint Express.

Foreign money. Foreign operators. Foreign languages. Foreign hassles. Use Sprint Express to call home, and you can forget about all of them. All you need are the access codes below to reach Sprint's English-speaking operators in the U.S. Tell the operator how you want the call billed:

The Fading Fad of Suntans

ARIS - Life is a beach - and not just for the 11 million French who left for their annual vacations last weekend. From Mar-tha's Vineyard to Marbella, bodies are stretched out in the sun, seeking the deep tan that is still symbolic of glamour, health and having a great

So someone out there on the horizon has hoisted a storm warning of holes in the ozone layer and skin cancer? Safe sun, like safe sex, is something that everyone believes in — but not quite yet.

Fashion, always hyper-sensitive to change, has already taken the plunge. The return of the cover-up swimsuit, with its underwired cups and sturdy shorts, has put overexposure out of style. It may be the result of fashion fatigue with barely there bikinis and naked flesh, but the new beachwear suggests altered attitudes to undress that is seen also in a revival of traditional

More significantly, fashion's elite are now choosing the shade for the first time since a year-round suntan became the distinguishing mark of wealth and glamour for the jet set in the 1950s. This volte-face may too be part of fashion's restless quest for change, for once every package tourist has a tanned hide, exclusivity lies on staying white. Whatever the reasons, aestheti-cally, as well as medically, there is a strong trend toward a pale skin.

The history of the suntan and the swimsuit may turn out to be as brief as the thongs that beachwear was reduced to by the 1980s — after 20 years of going

The swimsuit made its hig splash in the 1920s when Jean Patou opened a boutique in Deauville specializ-ing in sportswear and Coco Chanel's clothes emancipated women in both body and mind. For the first time in history, physical exercise became a part of women's lives, and fashion set the pace as it broke out of the stuffy salons and into the open air. The magazine photographs of the period by Hoyningen-Huene captured the freedom of beach and ocean.

Scott Fitzgerald both created and glamorized in his writing the lotus-eating life in the summer on the Côte d'Azur, Hollywood followed suit, posing starlets poolside, until Esther Williams's synchronized swimming on film became symbolic of Silver Screen glamour.

When Brigitte Bardot came out of the sea in a clinging wet dress in "And God Created Woman," she became a symbol of the new sex-sun-sand era. A tidal wave of bikinis, and the topless swimsuit first proposed by American designer Rudi Gernreich in the 1960s, washed over fashion. Only now, a quarter of a century on, has fashion felt the pull of an undercurrent the fear of AIDS and the dangers of melanoma.

But if there is a shadow over the sun, it may be just a beach hat Fashion and beauty companies have to face the realities of life, which is that most people in the Western world still take a traditional summer vacation. The emphasis is therefore on prevention rather than expecting people to change their habits.

The most significant move in the beauty business is to replace the bronze-is-beautiful formula with a focus on skincare. Although too many products still blind the consumer with psuedo-science, the basic formula is to label products with an SPF (sun protection factor). Although the measurements vary between countries, it is logical that the greatest protection always comes from the highest numbers. For example, Ambre Solaire, whose oils were a symbol of sun worship in the 1960s, now have a sophisticated range, which includes a factor 20 high-protection sum milk, with filters for the harmful ultraviolet rays. There are also moisturizing and anti-aging creams, and a total protection cream at factor 25.

The established companies have long known the harmful effects of the sun. Biotherm created its first anti-wrinkle sun cream in 1972 and now has a range of water-resistant moisturizing screens as well as a vitamin E-enriched facial repair cream. Estée Lauder's Cool Relief Mask, a gel to calm a "sun-stressed skin," is an admission that people will take too much sun in spite of all advice and the sun-screening products.

Vichy makes claims for a new formula of a reflecting sunscreen (factor 20) especially designed for the intense sun by the ocean or in the mountains. The company (like many others) also has a high security cream (factor 12) for children, who are known to be especially at risk from cancer if badly smburned at an order and the adds as a significant to the contract of early age. Phas adds an anti-salt treatment to its series of face protections; they are offered on a factor scale that progresses downwards, on the assumption that the melanin produced by the skin to cause tanning is nature's own protective mechanism.

Lancôme makes claims for a new departure for the 1990s: adding pure melanin to its sun products, which contain extracts of camomile (accepted as a natural calming agent) and vitamin E, also considered to be restorative. Lancôme's facial screen and body milk both have factor 25 protection, although in the schizophrenic mode of most skin-care companies, they also make low-screen products for those passionate about sunbathing.

AN anything really be done to harry up a suntan? Ultima II suggests preparing the skin three days in advance of exposure with a tan-activator, and then dividing the body into specific areas of high and lower sensitivity, with its Procollagen products to suit. Revion also proposes a pre-sun program, preparing the face and body with a moisturizer and tan activator, and also feeding nails and hair with a gel screen containing calcium and a moisturizing shampoo respectively.

Perhaps the most important message from the beauty houses is to to have a positive strategy as a sunworshipper, rather than just lurching on to the beach. Charles of the Ritz has a protective cream (factor 15) specifically for fragile areas, such as nose, ear lobes, oulders, bosoms and the soles of the feet.

Behind the serious research done by companies whose bottom line depends on it lies a screening of the truth about sunbathing: it is not good for your skin. That is why all major companies now have creams which are supposed to be tan-without-tears treatments. Estee lander's Self-Action Tanning Creme comes in three shades — dark, medium and light, complemented by a Tan Extender — a milk with a weak concentration. of the same elements to keep up the richness of the skin tone. Clarins, in an extensive range, has a self-action milk which is designed to give a tan in two to three hours (with or without exposure to the sun). Clarins also has high protection products and sun blocks especially for children or sensitive areas on adults.

Although sun blocks are widely sold, nothing can protect the skin from prolonged exposure to the intense heat of the noonday sun. Ultimately, the best protection will be fashion's retreat from the beach, which, in the next century, if not this, will make the tanned face seem as out of style as it was 100 years ago.

The Ad-Free Ms.

EW YORK — Twenty years ago this summer, Ms. magazine burst onto the scene, exhorting women to rethink old assumptions and establish new patterns for leading their lives. Two years ago, it took its own advice. Ms. set out then to prove —against heavy odds—that a magazine can survive without advertising.

Well, the champagne corks are popping at the bimonthly maga-zine these days in celebration of both birthdays. The 20-year anniversary is being marked with the publication of a glowing retrospec-

But at the urging of Ruth A. Bower and Gloria Steinern, two founders of Ms., Lang agreed not to close Ms. He said he would suspend publication for seven months and then give Ms. a go as one of the very few ad-free magazines. Others in the United States include Cousumer Reports, Mad and Guideposts, a religious publication. The entire business plan for Ms. revolves, of course, around the central fact that all revenue has to come from circulation. But unlike traditional magaziness zines. Ms. does not have to use its circulation to impress advertisers and to raise advertising rates. Michael Pashby, senior vice president with the Magazine Publishers of America, said a publication could eliminate a lot of problems if it did not need to guarantee a circulation to advertisers. "It is looking solely at the bottom line and how valuable each individual reader is to the magazine, rather than have to look at a reader as a consumer as

Ms. only wants subscribers who are genuinely interested in the magazine — so interested, in fact, that they are willing to pay up to $45 a year for six issues. Bower, the publisher of Ms., immediately began to compile a circulation base of core subscribers. She called women's groups all over the country and begged them to give her women's groups all over the country and begged them to give her their lists. Her efforts produced a data base with a million names. Applying the kind of spot-marketing that magazines use to identify readers attractive to advertisers, Bower found that most potential subscribers lived in 15 markets. She contacted 50 wholesalers and said she wanted the magazine distributed only to newsstands at specific locations. — in high-traffic bookstores and airports, but not in supermarkets or mom-and-pop store. As a result, about 65 percent of the magazines that are put for sale are acqually sold. Bower of the magazines that are put out for sale are actually sold, Bower said. This compares with an industry average of about 50 to 55

Ms. says it has 150,000 subscribers and sells 70,000 additional copies of each issue for $4.95 on newsstands. Since it does not carry advertising, the magazine does not go through the expense of having its circulation andited. At its peak, the magazine's circulation was 700,000, much of it in discounted subscriptions acquired solely for

"Last year, we had to sell 75,000 copies to break even," Lang said.
"When we got more than 75,000, we went with it." Lang said he made a profit on every copy after the first 80,000. He said each additional copy cost him less than 50 cents plus mailing costs, but declined to say what his profit margin was.

signer's dinner for 250 at the Museum of Modern Art two years ago. For one thing, the maestro himself was vacationing in "Strombob," said his right-hand woman, Gabriella Forte.

Then, too, there were none of the celebrities who had made the MOMA party so much fun: Robert De Niro, Richard Gere, Pat Riley, the Kennedy kids. This time there was just Mrs. Herbert Ross, who in her stalwart role as Armam's "director of special events" is still known as Lee Radziwill

The former princess, wearing a creamy white sait, wound her way up Frank Lloyd Wright's concrete spiral and merged into the throng of dark suits congested on the sixth level, where champagne and goat cheese were being served before the fashion show. "This is an industry event," said a member of Armani's New York staff, making the evening sound rather dour, like a trade show. But this is what weekday nights in the middle of summer in New York are made of: obligatory dinners that begin with a splash of San Pellegrino and end with a fig tart shortly before 11.

ND so there was Burt Tansky, the chairman of Bergdorf Goodman, talking to Marvin Traub, the former chairman of Bloomingdale's, while near the bar Helen O'Hagan of Saks Fifth Avenue was saying something to Etta Froio of Women's Wear Daily. Roberto Guerro bobbed past. "I'm making a film about Elizabeth Fortensky," announced Guerro. Elizabeth For-

Once the show began, it became fairly clear that the runway was not up to Armani's stan-dards, though it was modeled after the one he had installed in the basement of his palazzo in Milan: large opaque squares of white plastic supported by hidden rigging. Ont came the models, men and women in subtle shades of gray, hitting the runway with a collective thud that made the squares heave and shake. "This is getting dangerous," mused a fashion editor as one of the squares slid ont of its track, exposing the innards of the runway.

By then, a member of the crew, unfashionably dressed in shorts, was throwing himself across the runway with a roll of gaffer's tape, trying to scal down the errant square, as the long legs of models stepped gaily past him.

But by then, it didn't matter. The show was dragging on, interminably. One could say that the clothes, with their quiet resolve, looked perfectly fine. But so what? The trouble with secondary lines, like industry parties, is that no amount of styling and hype can lift them above

Italian Markets Soar on Wage Pact

MILAN - Italian financial markets surged Monday, applanding an agreement by the government, em-ployers and unions to scrap a system of indexing wages to inflation.

The agreement helped ease pressure on the line, enabling the Bank of Italy to cut the discount rate it charges on loans to banks by onehalf point, to 13.25 percent from 13.75 percent.

Economists said the deal, which is intended to reduce inflation and improve competitiveness, was the first step in restoring international confidence in a troubled economy. Stocks jumped 3.2 percent, bonds rose nearly two points and the lira rebounded against the Deutsche mark as investors returned to markets they had avoided since early lime.

Officials in the region said Euro Disneyland is causing them headaches because of the thousands of young workers needing a place to live.

"It's a big concern because these people have nowhere to go and nothing to do when they finish work," said Philippe Castro, a spokesman for the public organization that groups together the five villages closest to the park.

"They are not very well paid, and they do not have the means to go into Paris. We are doing what we can to integrate them." Mr. Castro said few local people had taken jobs at Euro Disneyland. As rents have soured, many village houses have been divided into rooms for Disney workers, often lacking phones and other facilities. A Disney spokesman said housing was a major problem when the park opened, but added that the fact that cast members no longer have to live in hotels is an indication that the problem is being solved. He said the organization provides housing for 3,000 workers and helps others find rooms.

Russia Ends Debts of State Firms

Compiled by Our Staff From Depatche MOSCOW - The Russian central bank has canceled debts for state-owned businesses, a legislator said Monday, warning the step would cause hyperinflation. Pyotr Filipov, head of the Repub-

The policy may force the government to print up to 1.5 trillion new rubles ($9.3 billion), according to press reports, more than double the 650 billion ruble limit set recently by the International Monetary Fund.

The IMF is helping to coordinate a $24 billion package of credit and aid to the former Soviet republics.

U.S. Sees No Retaliation Against Japan on Chips

By Keith Bradsher

New York Times Service
WASHINGTON — The United States has concluded that Japan's efforts to open its computer chip market to American exports are inadequate so far, but will not impose immediate sanctious, American officials said.

In an agreement reached a year ago, the Japanese government supported the American industry's goal of having foreign companies account for 20 percent of chip sales in Japan by the end of 1992. The agreement, however, specified no penalties if the target was not met.

The foreign share, almost all American, has hovered between 14 and 15 percent for the last way. The last of incompanies is a second of the same of percent for the last year. The lack of increase prompted U.S. trade officials to say on May 27 that they would review progress in the accord by Aug. 1. The review is now virtually complete and is scheduled for release this week. The report is critical of Japan but does not call for the United States to retaliate against Japanese exports, American officials said.

Japan blames weak economic growth for stagnation in the foreign share of the chip market, saying the weakness has made companies reluctant to do business with new suppliers. But that is a new argument, complained Daryl G. Hatano, the director of international trade and government affairs at the Semiconductor Industry Association, an American group.

Mr. Hatano said that until recently the Japanese electronics industry had been blaming a quickly growing market for the low market share of foreign chip makers. Japanese officials used to contend that with the market in their country growing 10 percent a year, American companies would have to increase their sales in Japan by 20 or 30 percent to increase market share. Mr. Hatano said. market share, Mr. Hatano said.

According to the industry association, Japan bought 47 percent of the $54.6 billion worth of semiconductors produced worldwide last year. Japanese companies accounted for 86 percent of sales in Japan.

PARIS - Aerospatiale lowered its estimate of new orders in 1992 about 15 percent, while the chairman of the French aerospace company warned employees to prepare for a period of uncertainty. The company's internal newsletter said new orders would be as little as 22 billion French francs ($4.4 billion) rather than the 26 billion francs originally projected.

The Aerospatiale chairman,

Louis Gallois, said a week of temporary layoffs is expected at the end of the year in the missile and space divisions and other cost-cutting measures may be necessary. In 1991, the aerospace concern-recorded orders worth 35 billion francs. The company lowered its estimate after receiving only 9 bil-lion francs in orders for the first five months of the year. In the airplane division, meanwhile, Aerospatiale said it achieved only 30 percent of the year's goals in the first five months. It noted the decision of Airbus Industrie, of which Aerospatiale is part owner, to reduce the output of

A-320 jetliners. Mr. Gallois explained that the cost-cutting measures were in response to sluggish markets, high debt and the dollar's weakness.

Belgium Plans Modest Budget Cuts

Compiled by Our Staff From Disparches
BRUSSELS — Belgium's center-left government on Monday agreed on a 1993 budget package that aims to cut the crippling budget deficit, but economists said it did not go far enough.

Prime Minister Jean-Luc Dehaene amounced

after all-night cabinet talks that the deficit would be cut to 5.2 percent of gross national product next year, or 354 billion francs ($11.7 billion), from 5.7 percent of GNP this year.

The government will suspend indexation of tax rates between 1993 and 1996, bringing about 57 billion francs into state coffers over the period. Mr. Dehacne said the government planned to raise a similar amount between 1993 and 1996 through asset sales and partial privatizations, although he gave no further details.

The government also plans to freeze spending on state-owned enterprises, social security and defense. "If we respect zero-growth during four years we will have made an ecormous effort" to prepare Belgium for the European Community's planned single currency and monetary policy, he said.

Belgium needs to bring its deficit-to-GNP ratio down to 3 percent by the end of 1996 if it wants to join the currency union.

Financial markets and Mr. Dehaene himself had hoped the cabinet would approve tougher cuts so that the deficit could be brought down to 4.9 percent of GNP next year.

Economists have already criticized the agreement as being a "soft option." Bond and stock markets have been depressed in the last few days and the budget deal did little to improve the mood on Monday, although it had little immediate impact on prices, dealers said.

"The meak heads this amount of the last few days and the budget deal did little immediate impact on prices, dealers said.

"The weak broth this government is serving has nothing to do with the final financial salvation," the daily De Standaard said in an editorial.

"I admit that we have not managed the hard budget scenario for 1993," Mr. Dehaene said. "For social reasons, we have opted for measures which will not reach their maximum effect until the end of the four-year period."

Clabecq Stock Skids After Loss Outlook

BRUSSELS - Shares of the Beigian steelmaker Forges de Cla-becq SA plummeted 12.7 percent Monday on news that the company expected a net loss in fiscal 1992 of about 1.9 billion francs ($62.7 million).

The steel maker said in a state-ment that the continued slump in expected losses. In its last financial year, ending June 30, 1991, Clabecq posted a loss of 836 million francs. Trading in the shares was suspended for half an hour early in the day, as required by the regulations of the exchange, when the price slipped more than 10 percent.

After trading resumed just before midday, the shares fell to a low close at 1,030 francs. The shares closed at 1.180 francs on Friday. Despite a Clabeco statement blaming weakness in steel prices, other shares in the sector in Belgium and Luxembourg remained steady. Arbed SA closed unchanged at 3,750 francs, and Cock-erill-Sambre SA shed one franc, to

Abbey Proposes Home Tax Credit

حكذا من الاصل

LONDON — Abbey National PLC on Monday proposed a tax-credit plan to stimulate the slumping housing market, which it blamed for a 12.3 percent drop in its first-half pretax profit.

Under Abbey's plan, submitted to Norman Lamont, chancellor of the Exchequer, and Michael Heseltine, trade and industry secretary, the British government would allow realized losses from house sales to be counted as a full tax credit. It said

WPP Shares Rise As Deal Is Backed

LONDON -- WPP Group PLC shares climbed 17.5 percent on Monday after Fidelity Investments, a key shareholder, said it would support the advertising would support the advertising group's restructuring.

On the London Stock Exchange, WPP shares closed at 47 pence (89 cents), up 7 pence from Friday.
Fidelity, which owns 10 percent of WPP preferred stock, initially opposed the plan, saying it favored debtholders over stockholders. But debtholders over stockholders. But the U.S. fund manager, which owns 10 percent of the preferred, changed its stance rather than jeopardize the advertising company's future.

£250 million ($480 million) a year. "If adopted, a tax-credit scheme may be sufficient to break the logjam that prevents the recovery, not just of the housing market, but of the economy in general," Abbey National's chairman, Sir Christopher Tugendhat, said.

A major factor preventing many homeowners from moving is that mortgages frequently exceed the market prices for their homes.

Abbey's plan would give a tax credit for people who sell their principal homes and buy another. That credit would represent the difference between the original pur-chase price and an independent current valuation.

Spokesmen for Mr. Lamont and Mr. Heseltine refused to comment on the plan.

Analysts said the government was likely to consider the proposal but it may introduce capital gains taxes on house sales if it accepts the tax-relief measure. Abbey's profit fell to £270 million from £308 million a year earlier, below analysts' expectations, as provisions for bad loans shot up to £138 million from £58 million. Abbey raised its half-year dividend to 3.8 pence per share from

3.5 pence. Its shares fell 4 pence, to 255 pence, on the London Stock Exchange. (Bloomberg, Reuters)

Taiwan Puts Fiscal Brake on 21st-Century Plan

The Associated Press

TAIPEI — Taiwan's government has put the brakes on a $303 billion plan to catapult the island nation into the 21st century, worried that the project could drain so much money it would undermine otherwise miraculous economic growth.

The six-year plan originally comprised 775 projects ranging from highways and sewers to baseball diamonds and a theme park.

However, Prime Minister Hau Pei-tsun has recently called the plan just a guideline, and said individual projects must be subject to each year's budget review.

Many officials say that most of the projects may eventually be tackled, but it could take up to 15 years.

"We might end up having gorgeous high-ways, but our industries could be damaged in the process," said Ma Kai, a prominent Taiwan economist. "Industrialists were exhiba-rated at first, but they now have growing doubts about the plan's feasibility."

Postponing these projects could hart for-sign contractors. Between $50 billion and $70 billion worth of the contracts would be open. Robert Strotman, commercial officer of the American Institute in Taiwan, the unofficial U.S. embassy since official ties were severed in 1979, said American companies

The government said the plan would help rate and bring Taiwan's annual per capita income to $14,000 by 1996. Last year, per capita income reached $8,800, fourth-highest

Officials also said Taiwan, flush with $80 billion in foreign reserves and extensive domestic savings, could afford the project without having to raise taxes. A number of economists now contend the plan could exhaust

A report from Academia Sinica, the top government research organization, estimated that government bonds to finance public works could reach $600 billion by the year 2000, or about 1.5 times the value of all Taiwan goods and services produced annually by then.

Mr. Ma, who works at the government Chunghua Institute for Economic Research, said Taiwan could soon be forced to raise interest rates and taxes, a move that would hurt labor-intensive industries. These industries, the backbone of Taiwan's economy, are already facing problems producing more so-phisticated products.

Opposition lawmakers say some projects were designed to help boost Taiwan's rela-tions with the United States, France and other Western powers.

One legislator, Peng Pai-hsien, contends a $17 billion high-speed railway that would probably be built by Western companies is uneconomical on this small island, the size of West Virginia.

TOKYO -- Key Japanese industries are planning to slash research and development spending in the cur-rent financial year by more than 15 percent because of the sluggish economy, the Japanese economic daily. Nihon Keizai Shimbun said Monday. Spending by the steel, chemical and electrical industries is expected to drop 15 to 20 percent, although overall research spending is expected to increase about 0.4 percent from a year earlier, according to the newspaper's survey of 318 Japanese manufacturers. The sharpest cut is by steel and nonferrous metals companies, which have slashed their research investment plans for the year ending March 31, 1993, by an average 20 percent from the prior year.

But construction-companies are expected to increase such spending by 86 percent, as are food, textiles and paper companies, by 40 percent. Japanese manufacturers spent a total of 8.6 trillion yen ($67.4 billion) on research and development during the 1990-91 fiscal year, up 12 percent from the previous year, according to the Economic Planning

Baseball's Hall: Ins and the Outs

By Ira Berkow New York Times Service

OOPERSTOWN, New York -On a day sumny and serene, in a meadow of this heartbreakingly beautiful village out of another century, and before an estimated 20,000 vocally appreciative spectators, four men were inducted with obvious emotion into the Baseball

"This," said Tom Seaver, seeking to put Sunday afternoon's moment into the perspective of his 20-year major league career, "is the last beautiful flower and the perfect bouquet."

who helped "transform the Mets from lovable losers to formidable foes," entered this Pantheon of Bat and Ball along with Rollie Fingers, the relief pitcher with a handlebar mustache; the late unpite Bill McGowan, and Hal Newhouser, known as Prince Hal, who unfairly had to wait much too long for this honor because he labored under the prejudice that he was just a wartime pitching ace. Newhouser dominated baseball in the mid-1940s, winning the American League MVP award in 1944-45. But that's when a lot of the major league's best players were fighting in World War II.

While 37 Hall of Famers, including Ted Williams, Stan Musial, Bob Feller, Bob Gibson, Yogi Berta and Charlie Gehringer, sat on the stage in front of the A.C. Clark Gymnasium, the three former ballplayers and the son of the late umpire, expressed their gratitude to the people who had helped get them to where they were.

Seaver also spoke of players like middle infielders who are underappreciated because they don't have the razzle-dazzle offensive statistics of the sluggers or some of the fancy numbers of the king-time.

statistics of the sluggers or some of the fancy numbers of the big-time hit-for-average batters. And since, as Casey Stengel once noted, you need 27 outs to win, it makes sense that defense is a significant part of the game, more so even than what the Hall of Fame sometimes reflects.

Earlier, Fingers had said that if there was one player who should be in the Hall who isn't, it's Phil Rizznto. It seems almost everyone agrees that Rizzato should be among the anointed, except for the odd Veterans Committee, which votes on matters of old ballplayers like Rizzoto, the former Yankee shortstop.

Beyond that, certainly the most striking omission on this otherwise glorious day was Pete Rose, who, like Senver, has been retired as an active player for five years now, which is the minimum required

R OSE WAS banned from baseball for "acts detrimental" to the game. It was widely believed, by both Bart Giamatti, the commissioner then, and Fay Vincent, the current commissioner, that Rose bet on baseball, and probably on his own team.

But there are no hard facts to prove this. And even if there were, there is no hint that Rose the player ever performed in any way other than superbly. Charlie Hustle's record on the field would have landed him in the Hall in a second.

Well, the Hall tells us, you have to be a good citizen, too, to enter. But we know all about some of the so-called good citizens, the reprobrates, whose plaques adom the Hall of Fame wall. And we wonder: In regard to gambling, what about someone like Rogers Hornsby, or John McGraw, notorious gamblers who did not hide the fact that they bet with bookies, an illegal act? While they apparently bet on horses primarily, is it crazy to assume that at some time or other each might have bet on the sport he knew best?

And lately I have come to think differently even of Shoeless Joe Jackson, whom I was reminded of when, touring the museum part of the Hall of Fame, I came across not only a pair of the spike shoes the alleged Shoeless Joe trod in, but also a life-size cardboard cutout of him snagging a line drive.

I believe Jackson threw some games during the 1919 Black Sox World Series—he had admitted "short-legging" balls in the outfield and intentionally missing the cutoff man—but I also think that it's possible after nearly 75 years to exoderate a man, especially one who, life the other so-called fixers, were actually acquitted of the charges in a court of law.

It think Shocless, playing for a miser as an owner, did wrong, though he had some reason for his wrong, but more important, he has paid his dues to baseball society.

And without question, one of the most important "contributors" to the game, Marvin Miller, should be in the Hall of Fame. Miller, early on derided and impugned by owners protective of their nice-little oppressive system, fought brilliantly and courageously as executive director of the Major League Players Association to bring the player-as-working-man-and-professional entertainer, instead of the player-as-underpaid-but-romantic-hero, into a world where he is fairly compensated for his sweaty endeavors.

Maybe next year, or the year after that, we will have all of those men, along with, say, Nellie Fox, who a few years ago missed getting the required 75 percent of the sportswriters' vote by one-tenth of a percent, and Ron Santo, a good hitter and an outstanding fielder, being swept into the Hall. They would take their place alongside such deserving recipients as those honored this day.

BARCELONA — Tired of complaints by American athletes that some of their teammates at the Olympics are living better than others, the head of the U.S. delegation said Monday he intended to press for a policy that would require all members of future American teams to reside in the Olympic village.

Leroy Walker, the chef de mission and nominee as the U.S. Olympic Committee's next president, said he planned to propose the measure at a meeting Tuesday with USOC officers. It is directly aimed at the baskethall team, members of the track and field team and termis players who are staying in luxury hotels at their own expense, their federation's or a sponsor's.

Walker, who was particularly critical of the basketball team, said he selt so strongly about maintaining an equality among American Olympians that he did not care if players from the National Basketball Association participated in the 1996 Olympics in Atlanta.

"I am not convinced yet we had to have NBA players on our team," he said. "With all the college players we have in the country, if we choose the right ones, we can still win. We can have professionals on the team; that's fine. We have professional skiers and others, and they're no problem. But they should all follow the same rules as everyone else. But if they don't want to and aren't here next time, I wouldn't care."

as professionals. The baskerball team is staying in a hotel charging $900 a night for each room. Members of the Santa Monica Track Clob, including Carl Lewis, Leroy Burrell and Steve Lewis, have rented private apartments. Mike Powell, the world-record holder in the long jump, and a number of the tennis players are staying in hotels or private apartments.

But that's not what the Olympics are all about, Walker contended, and others agree. The U.S. women's basket-ball team was offered rooms in the same hotel as the men's team but declined, preferring the ambience of the village. By isolating themselves, Walker said of the athletes outside the village, they are disdaining the Olympic experience and causing resentment.

"It's very simple," he said. "If you are an Olympian, you are a member of a team. I am opposed to any exceptions; I don't care who you are. If you want to live this experience, you ought to live it and not put yourself

The basketball Dream Team chose not to stay in the village for reasons of security and privacy. Carl Lewis, a three-time Olympian who has experienced similar attention, abandoned village living long ago. And individual stars from other countries, like Sergei Bublia, the Ukrai-Walker's sentiments have been fueled by "rumblings" of complaints from American athletes who feel like man who sets pole vault records almost as frequently as second-class citizens because they have none of the Barcelona has a hot day, have done the same.

Walker 'Not Convinced We Had to Have NBA Players'

"Tou much noise and distraction to perform well," said Lewis's manager, Joe Douglas. "If you want the Olympic experience, that's O.K. But I don't think it's conducive to doing well. Someone like Carl becomes a virtual prisoner in the village. He has no movement. And with roommates, some athletes are uncomfortable. This is not an emerging-athlete meet. Our purpose is the help our guys perform well."

To whatever degree those might be legitimate objections to communal living, along with beds too small and breezes too infrequent and services too modest, Walker was more concerned that all members of the team be

The disadvantaged among them are "disturbed," he said, adding, "They're asking, "Why do they get this, and I don't?" They're asking for equity of treatment."

Walker said he has also become concerned to the point of embarrassment over the number and volume of complaints in general from American athletes and coaches examples of incidents he cited:

· Jenny Thompson, a 100-meter freestyle swimmer, implied that the Chinese woman who defeated her had used drugs. Gwen Torrence, who finished fourth in the 100 meters in track, contended that three women in the final, whom she did not name, had used drugs.

Bela Karolyi, the gymnastics coach, accused the media of "destroying" his best athlete, Kim Zmeskal, who failed to win any medals.

• Two 400-meter runners, Steve Lewis and Danny Everett, accused the men's track coach, Mel Rosen, of "unprofessional" and "inconsistent" leadership in choosing athletes for the 1,600-meter relay team. Everett Complaining is not an Olympic event practiced only by Americans. An Italian soccer player griped to Italian journalists about conditions in the village, prompting Italian tennis players and fencers to complain about the soccer player. Several German athletes have complained about a lack of support from their national federations.

But the enduring stream of comments from his team has convinced Walker that Americans are too quick to blame other people and circumstances for their own shortcomings. He cited specifically Leroy Burrell, who was fifth in the 100-meter final, Torrence and Karolyi mong those who had not successfully dealt with the Olympic atmosphere and pressures, which require as much mental preparation as physical.

"We need to learn how to take our lumps," Walker said. "We haven't recognized that we don't have superiority in everything. We can't accept the fact the rest of the world has caught up in so many areas. It also bothers me that we never want to give the other guy credit. Some of our athletes need to grow up and learn to give credit to the opponent so it doesn't sound like sour grapes all the time. It belittles the performance of the opponent, It's also just not good human relations or sportsmanship."

Walker was uncertain if his recommendations would evolve into policy. More likely, the team's entire experience at the Games would be reviewed first, probably in the autumn before any action.

"But the issues need to be examined," he said. "That "I had to leave a message for him," Talic said. "He called me back the next day. He was happy, very happy. It was something to give us hope." Talic said.

.~ Talie had once coached Skender at the Bosnia weightlifting club in Sarajevo, the best training center in what was then Yugoslavia. Had the country remained united, Skender could not have qualified for the Yugoslav national team, and who would have noticed? He was a telephone mechanic, 32 years old, married with two children. Now he is a soldier in an army lacking weapons, and the Olympics, more than a sporting carnival, have become a duty to be fulfilled.

The fireworks at the opening ceremonies here, Talic said, only reminded the 23 members of the Bosnian delegation of the Yugoslav tactic of lighting up the sky in order to shell targets. That night the team became sick at the Olympic Village, the war having robbed them of their tolerance for rich foods. Skender said he had not seen meat in more than two months. Though he had only lost about four kilograms (nine pounds) in that time, he said, his strength had been re-duced by one-third. He regained the weight during his 10 days here,

The second half of his event, the clean and jerk, brought him to the stage's edge again. He was going to begin with 170 kilograms. "You have other disciplines in your life today," Talic told him. Success and Sad Farewell Unified Team Wins Gold, Looks Westward

By William Drozdiak Washington Post Service

Barcelona - Deprived of state privileges, bereft of hometown fans and anxious about their future, the Olympic athletes of the former Soviet Union are turning in impressive performances here motivated largely by one desire: to secure percial sponsors in the West.

The pursuit of money instead of the Order of Lenin is proving to be a seductive inducement for Olympic success. In gymnastics, weightlifting swimming wrestling and athletics, the Soviet-trained athletes have managed to sustain their previous dominance of Olympic events in spite of political and economic turnoil at home that, in many cases, disrupted their spartan raining regimens. Ethnic wars in Moldova, Georgia, Armenia and Azerbaijan blocked access to several important training centers normally used to prepare for the Summer Games, including a sophisticated high-altitude camp that was long considered a key to their athletic success, according to Nikolai Rusak, head of the Unified Team delegation. As the competition continues into its second week, the Soviettrained athletes, performing to-gether for the last time as the Unified Team before they adopt the colors of their now-independent republics, have surprised even themseives so far by winning 75 medals as of Monday morning, including 32 golds. The United States ranked well back in second place with 57 medals and 19 golds, while Germany came next with a total of 46 with 14 golds. The Unified Team medal winners will be compensated through a special fund set up by Olympic federations: $3,000 will be awarded for each gold medal, $2,000 for a silver and $1,000 for a brooze. But the real payoff, as many of them acknowledge, will be the opportunity to earn steady income in the West while maintaining ties of family and friendship back home.

"It's so different now because we need the money more than glory," said Vitali Scherbo, the high-flying gymnast from Minsk, Belarus, who won a record six gold medals in men's events. "We are all after big rankings will bring more money."

After his sparkling showing at pearance.

the Olympics, Scherbo said he expects to sign a contract soon with Mercedes to bear the luxury car company's insignia when he competes in European exhibitions. Other Soviet athletes and coaches have already staked out their fu-tures in the West by signing contracts for hefty salaries, training stipends or cash endorsements.

Ukraine's Sergei Bubka, who is expected to chalk up yet another world record in the pole vault this week, represents the Nike clothing and shoe company and has established his own athletic school in Berlin. Alexander Volkov, the top Russian basketball player, has just signed a $3-million dollar contract to play in Italy.

Alexander Gomolski, who coached the 1988 Soviet team to a gold medal in basketball, is already pased in the West and now conducts a barnstorming team called "High Five America" that is backed by Citibank, Continental Airlines and McDonalds, among other corporate godfathers.

"Everything was subordinated to sport in the Soviet Union," said swimmer Evgeni Sadovyi, who won three gold medals in freestyle events here. Now the state is run by different people and everything has to he done by your own efforts. You can only count on sponsors and families for help because there is no state patronage anymore."

In Rusak's view, the success of the Unified Team in these Olympics also has been spurred by a powerful sense of pride and comradeship. He said he believes the athletes share a desire to see the old Soviet dynasty "make an honorable exit from the arena of Olympic sports competition" in its final an-

For some, it has been a tearful and emotional farewell because of the strong friendships they forced over the years at the rigorous, communist-run sports academies that they called home.
"It's a shame to destroy the training system that has been developed," said Tatiana Lysenko, a 17-year-old gold medalist in women's gymnastics from Kherson. Ukraine. "The main thing for me is the sport and not the country I represent, and now we will be dispersed after working so long to-Nonetheless, most Soviet athletes express little nostalgia for a ruthless system that exploited their talents to serve the goals of com-munist propaganda. Instead, they prefer to talk about the future because they are worried about pro-tecting their athletic careers against the unpredictable consequences of political and economic chaos.

Once revered as state heroes, clite athletes are now treated as contemptuous targets of envy. Often, they must cope with harass-ment as well as common hardships faced by the rest of the population.

"We're are often afraid to go out at night," said Tatiana Gutsu, a 15year-old gymnast from Odessa, Ukraine who won a gold emdal in women's all-around events. "Even at home, we worry that people who are jealous will harm us." There are no conditions to train properly anymore," said Scherbo.

It's very difficult to manage one's life. In the gymnasium, there is no heat. If you have a car to drive there, it's hard to find gasoline. You can't find shirts in the shops or even the right food at the supermarket."

Scherbo said the Unified Team's success in reaching peak form despite the problems at home was due to the hospitality of the Italian Olympic federation. Italy ensconced the Soviet athletes in the weeks before the Games at Porto San Giorgio.
"The training facilities were ex-

OES it have to end? we ask after Preading the last page of a classic covel when the curtain falls on a now familiar world. Drawing on the gothic romance of Emily Bronte's "Wuthering Heights," and a taste of her sister Charlotte's "Jane Eyre," Lin Haire-Sargeant in "H.: The Story of Heathcliff's Journey Back to Wuthering Heights" cleverly explores previously unsuspected crevices and opens all the doors that seemed eternally bolted. Not only does she reinvigorate oor favorite characters, but their authors join in as well. The machinery of "HL" is half the fun; it contains all the narrative frames, clandestine meetings and near misses a reader could hope for. Though at times the novel seems to expand exponentially - shuffling characters and plots from various fictional realities and incorporating everything from stream-of-consciousness prose, as spoken by the ghost of Bronte's Cathy, to the most faithful recreation of 19thcentury speech - somehow it all falls into place. We are first introduced to Charlotte Bronte, the main narrator of "H.," whose train ride to Leeds becomes the engine of

On the train, by chance, she meets a Mr. Lockwood, he whom Nelly Dean held spellbound with her story of Heathcliff in the main narrative of "Wuthering Heights." Lockwood has of late received from Nelly Dean an almost sacred manuscript - the missing letter written by Heathcliff to sonlmate Cathy, which as confiscated upon the morning of Cathy's wedding to Edgar Linton.

The manuscript documents Heathcliff's three-year absence from Wuthering Heights. Entrusted with the burden of passing judgment, Lockwood sponta-neously solicits his new friend Charlotte's help. The scene is set as the train sways and Charlotte, while Lockwood dozes, reads through the night.
We are then quickly transported as Haire-Sargeant begins Heathcliff's tale outside a madhouse — a clue to the kind of novel she has in mind. Soon, at Thornfield Hall, outside Liverpool, Heathcliff finds himself indentured to an eccentric, wealthy gentleman, Mr. Are. We follow Heatheliff through plots about to be hatched and secrets about to revealed. And what about Cathy and Heathcliff? That's when Haire-Sargeant invites in the expert. Emily, walking with Charlotte, says, Very well, then. Not only will I take you to Wuthering Heights, I will tell you the true tale," Charlotte continues, "and walking along the narrowing path, dodg-ing the freshets from the melting bank that curled around our feet, she told. I heard, the tale that follows, Emily said, Imagine how it must have been, how it was. Imagine this . . . "

BARCELONA — Tennis may still be considered a minor Olympic event, yet on adjacent courts here Monday part of the history of the Barcelona Games was written when Croatia was assured its firstever Olympic medal and South Africa was guaranteed its first medal in 32 years.

U.S. Arts Fund Skirts Challenge

New York Times Service WASHINGTON — In a move that effectively outmaneuvers its sharpest liberal critics, the National Endowment for the Arts plans to shift $750,000 earmarked for fellowships in sculpture to regional arts councils around the United States.

The transfer comes in response to the refusal by the panel charged with evaluating the endowment's sculpture fellowships to complete its work in May.

At that time, the sculpture panel said it was bolding back its recommendations for grants to protest the decision by the endowment's acting chairwoman, Anne-Imelda Radice, to veto grants for two sexually explicit art shows.

"PAC people don't think like that. The reason that we donate is to support the electoral system. You see that Brinks truck over there loaded to the gills with cash and checks? That goes to the House Chairman on Thumb Tack Oversight. He's a good honest politician and we want to make sure he stays that way. We would ship it over to him whether he made life or death decisions on Thumb Tacks or not."

What can a president do for thumb tacks to warrant your large contributions?"

"Thumb tacks are essential to a successful government. The Republicans have had their old plans tacked up on walls all over Washngton ever since Reagan took office. Nobody reads them any more. The American voter wants change. Change means new thumb tacks, or as Clinton calls it, 'New Covenants.' This means that the U.S. will have to order millions of tacks.

That's why we've redirected the shipment of PAC money to the Democrats.

De Niro: Probing Many Faces of Creativity

By Caryn James New York Times Service

TEW YORK - Several nervous-lookling, middle-aged men are sitting around the waiting room of TriBeCa Productions in New York. One wears a threepiece blue suit with a wide-collared shirt open at the neck; another wears gray sharkskin pants, but they all have this in common: dark hair, olive skin and elothes that appear to have fallen off the back of a truck in Little Italy 20 years ago.

They have wandered out of fantasies of 'Mean Streets" and "Good Felias" and are waiting to audition for "A Bronx Tale," the first film Robert De Niro will direct. One by one, they are called into De Niro's office. And when they come out, they all say pretty much the same thing. "He was Travis Bickle would just as soon shoot you as be nice. July La Mora would pund. you faster than you could say nice. And for some reason — call it the curse of great acting or poor public relations or his absolute refusal to discuss his private life - the real Robert De Niro has an image uncontfortably close to that of the villains he plays.

In the past few years, De Niro has become a producer, director, real-estate investor and restaurant owner, while acting in good and bad movies almost faster than audiences can watch them.

He will star in three films to be released within the next year and has a small but energetically funny role in another, "Mistress," which opens in New York on Friday. Produced by TriBeCa, the De Niro company, the film was directed by one of his best friends, Barry Primus, and nearly wasn't released at all.

De Niro is almost 49. He has a lot of money and prestige at stake. And he can't afford not to play nice. Unlike most actors, he begins to look uneasy when we sit down to talk. De Niro is not a verbal type of guy. His words are alarmingly vague. This makes sense coming from a man who spends months getting his characters' wardrobes right. He finds those characters through the visual, the emotional, the tactile. Luckily, he has articulate friends and colleagues. "He's not a big talker," said Charles Grodin, a friend who starred with De Niro in the 1988 hit "Midnight Run." "But he has got to be one of the most complicated people around, because look at all he's doing."

Four years ago, with great flourishes of publicity, De Niro and some partners turned an old factory into the TriBeCa Film Center, with a screening room and offices for his and other production companies. On the ground floor, they created the TriBeCa Grill, a trendy restaurant.

Robert De Niro with Cliff Gorman, right, in "Night and the City," one of the films De Niro stars in this year.

Niro acting work began - 11 films in the past five years.

And he has only started to explore new fields. He emphasizes that directing "A Bronx Tale" is simply one step on the way to writing and directing. His company is producing the film, based on Chazz Palmmteri's play about a young man's coming of age in a 1960s Mafia-infested neighborhood; De Niro will play the young man's father.

There is a complicated fusion of art, commerce and energy here, and a clear decision to take control. De Niro explains: "I'm at a stage in my life where I really like to work a lot. I like to direct, but directing is only half of it. It's writing, totally creating something. It's not so easy because, like anything, people want you just to do one thing, to be a this or a that or whatever you've been known to do; and I want to do whatever I want to do, to try." He shrugs. "It's no hig deal."
Despite what De Niro says, of course, the new burst of energy in his career is a big deal, or at least a lot of small and medium-sized ones. "Mistress" may be the slightest of the new De Niro films, but it is the one in the most trouble, the one with which he has something to prove.

Primus, better known as an actor, spent about seven years trying to make this mov-ie, about a struggling filmmaker and the potential investors who will put up money only if he casts their girlfriends.

Over the years, De Niro showed his friend's script to the right people. Some weren't interested; some wanted to turn it into a different movie. Finally, Primus recalled, "One day I was walking down Broadway with Bobby, and he said, 'I'm going to start this company in a couple of years, and if you still haven't gotten this movie made, I'll do it." Later, De Niro agreed to act in it, to help it along.

De Nino perks up when asked about the film. "A lot of people were not interested in distributing it because it's not a high-concept movie by any means, so what's in I for them? But it's a piece of art from beginning to end and nobody can say that it foesn't have honorable intentions and it is what it is. You can dislike it, you can put it down, but you can't put it down for not being true to itself. You might not like the people, you might not like the director. There's always the answer; 'cause people
